ACTION OF TRINITY CHURCH, NAPANEE

The Quarterly Official Board of Trinity Church, Napanee, at a recent largely attended meeting, passed the following resolution, practically unanimously:

"Moved by W. F. Hall, seconded by M. C. Bogart, That we, the Quarterly Official Board of Trinity Church, Napanee, at the regular February quarterly meeting, held in Trinity Church on the evening of the 13th February, 1923,

Do place ourselves on record as follows: That whereas when we unanimously invited Rev. W. R. Tanton to become our pastor last year we did so believing that it was in the best interests of the work of God in our community in which we were deeply interested and in which we had spent much fifty years of the best and strength of our strength and time and money in building up an organization that was in splendid shape to do efficient work, and our only thought was to secure good and successful leadership;

"And whereas we did not at any time have an idea that we were doing anything that was wrong, we were certainly surprised, after having followed strictly the Methodist Discipline of Church, to find strong forces opposed to our action;

"And whereas we believe a serious mistake has been made, and we simply cannot go on as we are, and if nothing is done to make matters right, we feel sure all the interests of the Church we love will suffer materially and the results will be disastrous;

"And still believing that Rev. Mr. Tanton can best serve the interests of Trinity Church in Napanee, and can secure the best results;

"Be it therefore resolved that we now extend to him a hearty invitation to become our minister, and we would respectfully ask and strongly urge the 1923 Stationing Committee to accede to our request and appoint him to Trinity;

"And accordingly we hereby invite Mr. Tanton to become our pastor, and we do hereby promise that we will give him our hearty support and we will endeavor with all that is in our power to make Trinity Church, Napanee, a vital force for good."—Christian Guardian.

The Executives of the following organizations of the Church, Sunday School, Young People's Union, Ladies Aid and Women's Missionary Society, also passed unanimously resolutions endorsing the action of the Quarterly Official Board in issuing the invitation contained in the above resolution.

Burns the Philosopher.

"Burns was naturally a student gifted with a great mind," says Dr. J. L. Hughes in "The Real Robert Burns." "His splendid mind was trained to act logically by his remarkable father, and quickened and illuminated by his great teacher, John Murdock.

"He was a great philosopher, not merely because he read Locke's 'Essay on the Human Understanding' when a boy, but because during his short life he read with joyous interest many books of a philosophical character, and what is of infinitely greater importance, he interpreted all he read with an independent mind, and related all truth as he understood it to human life. He could discuss even the principles of Spinoza and 'venture into the daring path Spinoza trod.' Yet, as he told Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh, he merely 'ventured in' to test Spinoza's philosophy, which he soon found to be inadequate to the true development of the human soul, and therefore he 'was glad to grasp revealed religion.'

"Not merely as a poetic genius but as a profound philosophic teacher of religion, democracy, and brotherhood is the most essentially vital element related to the highest development of the souls of men and women—will the real Robert Burns become known as he is more justly and more deeply studied."

Will Go to Eton.

What could be more natural, seeing that Viscount Lascelles went to Eton to school, and his father, the Earl of Harewood, went to Eton, and maybe his grandfather also, than that the new arrival at Chesterfield House should also go to Eton. And this, it appears, has already been arranged. The necessity for such rapid action is to be found in the fact that the more exclusive English seats of learning are so limited in their accommodations that those who are determined at all costs to have their sons educated therein must take this somewhat drastic step to insure their desire being satisfied. Then, too, Princess Mary's boy, as he is likely to be designated chiefly until he reaches his majority, will be booked as a future member of his father's clubs before he is a year old, for a similar reason.

A New New Zealand.

The gradual disappearance of the native races of New Zealand and the ever-increasing European population is not the only great change taking place in that antipodal country. As a result of the competition with imported species which have returned to a feral life, the lower animals are also fast giving ground. Nor is this change confined to the animal kingdom. More than eleven millions of trees of various kinds have been imported from the United States and elsewhere by reason of their superiority over the slow-growing native species; and these hardy forests of temperate origin bid fair, in time, to crowd out their sub-tropical rivals.

POPULAR ERROR AND TRUTH IN CONTRAST

The true test to apply in the determination of religious truth is the one given by Isaiah 8-20. "To the law and the testimony : if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."

To bring the matter to a focus the following tabularized contrast of popular tradition with the word of God is here presented :

POPULAR TRADITION.

"I can imagine that when a man dies suddenly one of the first emotions he experiences in the next world will be surprise. He looks about him, O that glory ! How resplendent that throne ! He listens to harps of gold, and he can scarce believe it true. I, the chief of sinners and yet in heaven ; and then, when he is conscious that he really is in heaven, O what everlasting joy."—C. H. Spurgeon, Sermon No. 349, page 314.

THE WORD OF GOD.

"And no man hath ascended up to heaven," John 3-13. "For David is not ascended into the heavens," Acts 2-34. "As for me, I will behold Thy face in righteousness ; I shall be satisfied when I wake with Thy likeness." Psalm 17-15 ; 1st John, 3-2 ; 1 Thess. 4, 13-18.

P. T. "I'll praise my Maker with my breath,
And when my voice is lost in death,
Praise shall my nobler powers employ,
Dr. Watts.

THE BIBLE—"For the living know that they shall die ; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward ; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love and their hatred, and their envy is now perished ; neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." Eccles. 9-5-6. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. 146, 4. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence," Psa. 115, 17. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee ; in the grave who shall give thee thanks," Psa. 6, 5.

P. T.—"The souls of believers at death do immediately pass into glory." (Meth. and Presby. Catechism.)

THE BIBLE—"God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave," Psa. 49 : 15. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that all which He hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." John 6, 39-40 ; 1 Cor. 15. 1 Thess. 4, 13-16 ; Eccles. 9, 10.

P.T. "With Thee we'll reign,
With Thee we'll rise,
And kingdoms gain, beyond the skies,
Beyond the bounds of time and space,
The saints secure abode."
—Dr. Watts.

THE BIBLE—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," Matt. 5 : 5. "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth," Rev. 5 : 10. "And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," Daniel 7 : 27.

P.T. "A never dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky—Charles Wesley."

THE BIBLE—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die," Ezekiel 18 : 4-20.

P.T. "When the poor in soul shall find itself in the hands of angry fiends, it shall seem in that first moment as though it had been ailing for a thousand years. What will be his surprise, "And am I," he will say, really he ? I was in the streets of London but a moment ago. I was singing a song but an instant ago and here I am in hell." Chas. H. Spurgeon Sermon No. 369, p. 312.

THE BIBLE—"The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment ; though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish forever like his own dung ; they which have seen him shall say, "Where is he ?" He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found, yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night," Job20 ; 5-8. Read Psalm 37 : 20 ; 37 : 34.

P. T. "God is therefore Himself present in hell to see the punishment of these rebels against his government that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt. His fiery indignation kindles and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while His powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible, thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it eat most intolerably deep. He will assert all His diving attributes to make them a wretched through eternity as the capacity of their nature will admit." Benson, the Methodist Commentator.

THE BIBLE—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power, when he shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." 2 Thess. 1 : 9-10 ; 2 Peter 2 : 9 ; Isaiah 26 : 14 ; Jer. 51 : 39-57. God is just and in His justice is made manifest. He could not punish them with justice, and He could not reward them with justice, therefore He puts them aside.

P. T.—O miserable state of the damned ! In it they utter as many blasphemies against God as the happy souls in heaven should hallelujahs to His praise.—Am. Tract Soc., p. 227.

THE BIBLE—"For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble ; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts," Mal. 4 : 1-3. Read Matt. 15 : 8-9 ; 1st Peter, 4 : 11 ; 2nd Tim. 4 : 3-4.

O reader, refuse not Him that speaketh ! Turn not thine ear from the invitation which calls thee to drink of the fountain of the water of life freely. Gladly accept it ; humbly comply with its requirements and thou shalt, in due time, be delivered from the bondage of mortal flesh, which lies heavy upon thee, and promoted to the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Defies Rust!

There's one big point about "Toronto" Stable Equipment which makes me specially proud to sell it. It's the fact that the galvanizing thoroughly covers and completely coats both the inside and the outside of the steel tubing with pure zinc spelter. This "hot" process makes it absolutely rust-defying and proof against strong stable acids for the maximum period.

This is a mighty valuable feature. Let me explain some of the many others. Or get some of the interesting Toronto literature.

Curious Camphor Ceremonies.

One of the most important industries of Borneo is camphor gathering, and many weird religious rites are connected with it.

Camphor is obtained from the wood and leaves of the camphor tree, and the variety grown in Borneo is particularly valuable. The industry is entirely in the hands of natives, for Europeans confine their activities to rubber.

The camphor is found on certain trees, either in little crystals like sugar, or in masses. These large pieces are not unlike the human forearm in shape and size.

Before the natives set out to gather the camphor their villages are uncannily silent. The men who are to reap the harvest avoid oil of any kind, and when they set out take neither pins nor mirrors with them.

While they are away from home they may eat only certain foods, and each man must consume a small portion of earth to ensure good luck. The gatherers speak in certain set phrases, which form what is known as the holy camphor language.

Frederic Harrison Was Dean of English Letters Last of Great Victorians

Frederic Harrison, who died recently in his ninety-second year, has often been called "the last of the great Victorians," but the title is not particularly apt, so long as Thomas Hardy survives. No great Victorian, however, touched literature at so many points. Indeed it has been said that not since the time of Bacon has an Englishman written so much and so well upon so many different subjects as Frederic Harrison. One of the most remarkable things about him is that to the last he preserved his keen interest in what was going on about him and this interest is probably the explanation of the charm and freshness that marked his writings as much at the age of ninety as they had at the age of thirty. He wrote on literature, on law, on religion, on labor, on economics, on politics, on ancient history, and he touched no subject he did not illumine.

In an article of almost prophetic timeliness Herbert L. Stewart, professor of Philosophy in Dalhousie University, says of him:

"He can recall being taken as a small child by his father to watch the great procession on the morning when Queen Victoria was crowned. As a boy he played cricket and fished over areas that are now crowded by fashionable London residences. The earliest political struggle still vivid in his imagination was that which swept away the Corn Laws and established free trade. His memory stretches back to a time when England was traversed by a network of stage coaches and the project of a railroad was scarcely more advanced than the present scheme for an aerial post, when the British fleet consisted only of sailing vessels and its guns discharged only balls of solid iron, when persons were hanged for theft, when chimneys were cleaned by little boys dragging up the brush from the hearthstone to and when it was thought a notable reform to substitute an undersized man—generally a dwarf—for the wretched child if the chimney happened to be on fire! Who does not catch his breath at the thought of one still alive who has talked with a naval officer that served on the Bellerophon when Napoleon I. was being conveyed to English waters? And who else among us can have spoken with those who saw Dr. Samuel Johnson receive his honorary degree in the Sheldonian Theater, or has heard from those who heard from an eyewitness about the scenes in Oxford when James II. expelled the Fellows of Magdalen College? Here, if ever, we have a man who owes his reminiscences to posterity."

In closing his "Autobiographic Memoirs" ten years ago he quoted Moore's lines:

"When I remember all
The friends so linked together
I've seen around me fall,
Like leaves in wintry weather,
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted."

For sixty years Frederic Harrison knew everybody of first rate importance in England and most of the big men of Europe. Tennyson, Carlyle, George Eliot, Matthew Arnold, Huxley, George Meredith and Herbert Spencer were his acquaintances or friends. Tennyson was sensitive to a criticism of him made by Arnold, who placed him second to Byron, though placing him easily first among the Victorian poets. He had many a controversy with Huxley, and on one occasion apologized to Huxley for an unfair criticism by saying "a dog should not bite a dog." He also crossed swords with Ruskin who was his intimate friend.

Before these days he had been the admirer and defender of John Bright and had re-echoed his criticism of the Crimean war; and, a man of action as well as a man of thought, had gone to Italy in the days of Italy's final struggle for liberty and had done his part in awakening British sympathy for that nation. He was a fearless critic and many times in his life took the unpopular side. He supported the trades union movement and thus offended powerful friends, but did not hesitate to criticize extremists in the labor movement when they arose. As a rule, however, Harrison was one of those rare critics who forced admiration even from those with whom he was most strongly differing. In 1901 he visited the United States on the invitation of a number of leading men, including Joseph Choate and Theodore Roosevelt.

Frederic Harrison was the chief protagonist in England of the positivist theory of Auguste Comte, the French philosopher, and this was his favorite pre-occupation to the end of his days. As a youth he appears to have been of a deeply religious turn of mind, but later he conceived a hot antagonism to the Church of England "as a political and social scandal." The time came when he could not accept the Divine or mystical revelation, but some sort of religion was an essential to his being, and there are those who believe that in reality Harrison was not far removed from the essence of Christian faith. He has given several definitions of positivism, of which the most concise is "Positivism on the religious side is in itself an effort to revive the moral and social efficacy of Christian ages on a truly scientific and historical basis — placing what is permanent in these institutions on the firm ground of sociology instead of revelation." The closing sentence of his "Religion of Humanity" is "The service of humanity, the only service I much value, is a heart full of loving sympathies and a life full of humane acts."

Gold production in Canada in 1922 passed the million ounce mark for the first time since 1902.

Public works to be undertaken in Vancouver this year will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000,000, of which $2,000,000 will be spent by the Canadian Pacific Railway on pier construction.

The Canadian Pacific steamship Montcalm carried 900 emigrants for Canada on her last voyage from Liverpool, the largest number of emigrants to leave that port this year.

Work was commenced last week on the new elevator at the Ballantyne pier, Vancouver, which will cost approximately $2,000,000 to complete. The new elevator will have a storage capacity of 1,500,000 bushels.

Three thousand seven hundred licensed grain elevators in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have a total storage capacity of over 100,000,000 bushels. Ontario, Quebec and Maritime provinces have storage facilities capacity up to 23,180,000 bushels.

The first lodge of Free and Accepted Masons in the history of the Merchant Marine World, was recently organized on the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of France, when cruising the Mediterranean Sea with a party of 800 Canadian and United States tourists.

Four thousand seven hundred and eighty-four cars of last season's fruit crop have been shipped out of the Okanagan district in British Columbia up to February 14th, according to a statement made to the Vancouver Board of Trade recently by F. W. Peters, general superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, B.C. division.

Sault Ste. Marie.—The new downtown ticket and telegraph office of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion Express Company at the corner of Queen and McDougall street, in the building formerly occupied by the Public Utilities Commission, is one of the finest in the province. There are some larger offices in the larger cities, but none that are better equipped.

Herald Rindal, divisional engineer for the Canadian Pacific Railway, who has been located at Vancouver for the past thirteen years, and F. W. Alexander, divisional engineer for Alberta at Calgary, have exchanged posts, it being the company's policy to develop its engineers by giving them experience with the varying conditions in different parts of the Dominion.

A number of western interests have combined and chartered the Canadian Pacific steamship Pretorian, and the vessel will sail from Montreal on August 1st for Fort Churchill, for the purpose of proving to the satisfaction of the interested parties whether or not conditions of navigation to and from Hudson's Bay can be made a commercial success. Between three and four hundred passengers from the west will make the trip.

J. S. Brown, president of the Brown Fruit Company of Edmonton, Alta., returned on the Metagama last week from a three months' visit to Europe. He was present in Germany when the French invaded the Ruhr, and he said that the feeling was very bitter between the two races. On the other hand, a Canadian, American or British officer was given a cordial welcome; this being largely due to a speech in which Lloyd George advocated a compromise. Travel in Germany, he said, was surprisingly cheap, he having made one trip of nearly 150 miles for the sum of fifty cents in Canadian currency.

When the Canadian Pacific steamship Metagama, which left St. John's on March first for Glasgow, reaches her destination, Captain G. B. Evans, O.B.E., her commander, will have completed his last voyage in command of the vessel. Captain Evans, who is the oldest and one of the most highly esteemed commanders in the service of the Canadian Pacific Steamships, Limited, is retiring after a career at sea of 48 years, during which time he crossed the Atlantic in command 578 times, and conveyed 247,923 passengers, of whom 71,000 were Canadian and American troops. He was in command of the Missanabie when this ship was sunk by the Germans in April, 1918, and will be remembered by many passengers as the captain of the Minnedosa, the Montcalm or the Empress of Scotland.

Speed on Runners.

Swiss winter sports are now in full swing, and even in the north of England there have been a few days when tobogganing was quite good.

Now, although when we slide down a snowy hill on a sled, we always call it "tobogganing," it is really nothing of the sort, for the real toboggan is an American Indian invention. It is flat-bottomed, and curved at the front end, requires a very smooth, hard frozen surface on which to travel.

What we use for sledging downhill is an affair with shod wooden runners, which much more nearly resembles the Swiss "lodge." This is faster than a toboggan, more easily steered, and will travel over a much rougher surface.

It has been used in the Alps for a very long time past. In "Smollett's Travels Through France and Italy" the author tells us how, in March, 1765, he crossed the Alps from Nice to Turin. Having reached the summit, the guides produced what they called a "lese," or sledge, and invited him to sit upon it. "I did not much relish this kind of carriage," he writes, "especially as the mountain was very steep and covered with so thick a fog that we could hardly see three yards in front of us."

The guides, however, persuaded him and his companions to take their seats, and they descended the mountain at such a pace that when they reached the village of Le Nion they had to wait two hours for their servants who had come by road.—London Tit-Bits.

COMMUNITY RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITY

Dr. J. G. Shearer.

The Community, whether it be the municipality, the province or the nation, has rights which other communities must respect and which its own citizens must respect. It has also its own responsibilities to its neighbor communities and to its own citizens.

Let us consider its responsibilities.

It is responsible for the guarding of the life of its citizens. Life is precious equally to the individual—precious to the community. Neither can continue unless life is sacred. If life is to be held sacred it must be guarded by law forbidding the taking of life and providing adequate penalties to secure that end. And that law must be enforced rigidly and uniformly. It is the duty of every citizen to honour that law, and to aid in its enforcement himself.

The Community is responsible for the property of its citizens. Property is sacred, perhaps not as sacred as life, but sacred. It too, must be guarded by law forbidding theft and providing suitable penalties. This law must be enforced and it is the duty of each citizen, not only to obey but to aid in the enforcement of that law.

The Community is responsible for the health of its citizens. Health of each can only be secured by a law of health for all. No one can live unto himself. He cannot be healthy if his neighbor or any group of his neighbors is permitted to spread contagion. Hence the health laws with their imperiousness and penalties. These laws will not permit a woman at her own back door to throw out refuse and create a puddle of decaying vegetable or animal matter. Why? Because it will breed filth-spreading flies to carry typhoid or infantile paralysis to her neighbor's child or to start an epidemic of sickness and death in the Community. This means limitation of liberty to some in order to ensure health for all.

The Community is responsible for the education of its children. Citizens who are intelligent and good will seek education for their children. Citizens who are ignorant, indifferent and may even object to education for their children. The Community steps in with a law of compulsory education. But may not a parent say whether his child is to be educated or not? No, because an ignorant father has no right to blight and limit the life of his child by compelling it to grow up in ignorance and be handicapped for life.

It follows from this that the Community is responsible for the protection and care and training of all handicapped and underprivileged children such as dependent, neglected, delinquent, physically and mentally defective children, children of unmarried parents and the like," no matter whose liberty is limited in the discharge of this duty, and even though this involve taxation upon the citizens of the Community in general. This generation has responsibilities to the next generation as well as to itself.

The protection of women and children against exploitation of the greed of merciless money-making and the desire of equally merciless lust. Hence Minimum Wage Laws, Child Labour Laws, laws against sexual immorality and commerce in sex, and traffic in the vices of gambling, drink, noxious drugs and what not.

And the Community's rights correspond with its responsibilities. It has certain rights over all its citizens because it has responsibilities to all its citizens, and these rights are in proportion to these responsibilities. It may limit the liberty of each of its citizens to any extent necessary in order to conserve the life, property, health, and the general good, physical, mental, or moral, of all its citizens. There are in general no individual rights sacred as against the rights of the Community or of society as a whole, excepting of course in matters of conscience. And in the Community the majority must rule under one modern democratic system of Government. The demos or people must govern. The individual must obey. This is in order to ensure safety and liberty for each and for all. And since the Community consists of its citizens it is the duty of each to assist by example, precept and active co-operation in the enforcement of the will of the Community expressed in laws—in all its laws—whether they as individuals approve of these laws or not.

Romances in House of Savoy

Italians in their enthusiasm over the impending marriage of Princess Yolanda, eldest daughter of the king and queen, in accordance with the dictates of her heart, to a young dictates of her heart, to a cavalry officer of her own nationality and belonging only to the inferior nobility, proclaim that it is the first instance of a matrimonial alliance between the sovereign house of Savoy, one of the most ancient dynasties in Europe, with any one who is not of royal or imperial birth. This is very far from being the case, according to Frederick Cunliffe-Owen. The history of the reigning family of Italy is particularly rich in romance, and may be said to excel all others in Europe by the number of its marriages that have been based on affection, and upon dynastic or political considerations. Indeed, the romance of Princess Yolanda has very many precedents. Thus, the great-grandmother of Capt. Count Calvi di Bergolo's royal fiancee, namely, the mother of Queen Marguerite, after the death of her first husband, the Duke of Genoa, contracted a love match with her exceedingly good-looking chamberlain, Nicholas, Marquis of Rappolo. The marriage, solemnized by the Cardinal Archbishop of Turin, followed so soon after the death of the Duke of Genoa that his elder brother, King Victor Emmanuel II., was filled with indignation and banished his sister-in-law from Italy for a number of years.

It was only after the lapse of about six or seven years that the "Re Galant 'Uomo" became reconciled to the duchess, allowed her to return to Italy and restored to her the care and custody of her two children, the present Duke of Genoa and Princess Marguerite (now Queen Dowager), of which she had been deprived. Old King Victor Emmanuel's second son, the knightly Amadeus, Duke of Aosta, also married outside the royal caste. His wife was the daughter of a mere Italian nobleman of no particular importance, the Prince Dal Pozzo della Cisterna, and of a Belgian Countess de Merode. She was a woman of altogether remarkable beauty, also of much cleverness, and had inherited great mining interests in Belgium from her parents. She had completely fascinated her father-in-law, old King Victor Emmanuel, who admired her greatly, and who, when his son, the late Duke of Aosta, was elected to the throne of Spain in 1870, relied upon her to overcome the difficulties by which her husband was confronted. But the fact that she was not of royal birth rendered her position at Madrid well nigh impossible. The proud Spanish grandeesa objected to her — not only as a foreigner, but more particularly as being by birth a mere member of the Italian aristocracy instead of a princess of the blood.

They declined to accord her any royal honors, and the masses of the Spanish people followed suit. In fact, her court at Madrid was subjected to the most cruel and humiliating boycott, evil construction being placed even upon her greatest acts of kindness and generosity, and the ended by affecting her health to such an extent that her husband abandoned in anger the throne which he had only with reluctance on being elected thereto by the Spanish people, and returned to Italy, where his consort died shortly afterwards. It is from her that her sons, the present Duke of Aosta, the Count of Turin, and the Duke of the Abruzzi, have inherited their remarkable good looks, and also their wealth. The Duke of Aosta and his sons stand immediately next to Crown Prince Humbert in the line of succession to the crown. King Victor Emmanuel has a number of relatives through love matches by royal princesses of his house with members of patrician families of Rome. Thus, his great-great aunt, Princess Catherine of Savoy, married Don Philip Colonna, Grand Constable of the Kingdom of Naples, while another grandaunt, Princess Gabrielle of Savoy, gave both her heart and her hand to Don Camillo Massimo, hereditary Grand Postmaster to the papacy. Then there is princess Leopoldine of Savoy, who became the consort of Don Andrea Doria, and from whom the present head and last male survivor of the historic Doria family is descended.

At the grand ball given at Paris by the Austrian Ambassador, Prince Schwarsenberg, in 1808, in honor of the wedding of the first Emperor Napoleon and Archduchess Marie Louise of Hapsburg a terrible conflagration occurred in which hundreds of the guests perished, the emperor and empress escaping with the greatest difficulty and the ambassadress being among the victims. Overcome by the smoke and by terror, the wife of Charles Emmanuel of Savoy had fainted away on one of the upper floors of the blazing palace. She was rescued by a relatively unknown French gentleman, Pierre de Monlleart, a member of the nobility of the Orleans regin. He carried her off to safety with the utmost difficulty. After the death of her royal husband she married him, and he thus became the stepfather of Charles Albert of Savoy, afterwards King Charles Albert of Sardinia, the grandfather of King Humbert, and the great-grandfather of the now reigning King Victor Emmanuel. By this marriage Pierre de Monlleart, who had meanwhile received the rank of prince, alike from the King of Sardinia and from the then Emperor of Austria, had several children, two of whom grew up, namely, Prince Maurice and Princess Augusta. Prince Maurice de Montleart married an extremely pretty woman of the name of Fitzgerald.

Politeness.

Father: "Politeness, my son, is the art of not letting other people know what we think of them."

Facts and Figures.

China has 225 people to each square mile of territory; Japan has 376, and Australia less than two.

Mr. Bonar Law has confessed that in his youth he strove hard to learn shorthand and failed completely.

After counting all the hairs on the heads of the students, two professors of Munich University found that men have from 40,000 to 50,000 hairs, while women have from 60,000 to 70,000.

There is one place in England always and absolutely immune from fire. This is a box in which specimen coins of the Mint are deposited. These coins are tested annually by a jury of goldsmiths to see if they are of the requisite weight and fineness. This is known as the "trial of the pyx."

Marshal Foch's Retort.

While on his recent visit to the United States, Marshal Foch made a witty reply to a man who, when one of the guests at a dinner party in Denver, given by a party of Americans, took exception to French politeness. "There is nothing in it but wind," he said with questionable taste. "Neither is there anything but wind in a pneumatic tire," returned the gallant marshal, "yet it eases the jolts along life's highway wonderfully."

Quadruplets.

Quadruplets are twenty times as rare as triplets and more than 2,000 times as rare as twins. Roughly the proportion is one set of quadruplets to 250,000 births. Three sets of quadruplets were born in England in 1904, and there is no record of any more until 1909.

Wheelsman Says Trouble Is Over

Toronto Citizen Suffered so From Stomach He Feared the Worst; Tanlac Brings Complete Relief.

"Tanlac put me on my feet three years ago, and I have been in the pink of condition ever since," states John J. Matthews, 12 Ashby Road, Toronto, Ont., well-known wheelsman on the steamer, Toronto.

"I had stomach trouble so bad that at times I simply had to use hot appliances in an effort to subdue the pain. Gas almost choked me after eating, and I dreaded this so much I frequently made a complete trip on the steamer, two days, without food. I could never rest and felt so bad I could hardly stick to my wheel. In fact, I was so near 'all in' I thought I was going to have to give up completely.

"It was a great day for me when I went to the drug store and got Tanlac, for the medicine proved a god-send to me. I haven't had a sick day since I finished the treatment, but have been feeling as fine as I ever did in my life."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35-million bottles sold.

CANNED GOODS SAFE AND WHOLESOME

Sir William Wilcox, Scientific advisor to the Home Office in the British Government, said recently, "I never, (it would have been brought to my notice if cases had occurred) during the war, saw a single case of food poisoning where the poisoning had arisen from the food being poisonous when it was in the unopened tin." This statement was based on experience obtained during the late war, when millions of troops were fed for years largely on canned goods. Evidence on such a gigantic scale should convince the most skeptical that, when proper care is taken in connection with the putting up of canned food products—such as is required in establishments operating under government supervision—nothing but a sound, wholesome product can enter consuming channels. It is well, to bear in mind that when unwholesome material is excluded from canned goods during manufacture, no subsequent laboratory test will ever reveal its presence in the finished article.

FOUND GHASTLY ICICLE.

Man Committed Suicide by Hanging In the Woods.

OTTAWA, March 19. — Hanging with a trolley rope around his neck from a bough of a tall pine tree 40 feet from the ground, the body of a man covered with snow and ice was discovered in a pasture near Aylmer, 12 miles from here, by two boys Saturday afternoon. Eugene Bourgeau and Walter Glandon were hunting rabbits in Lortie's pasture, three-quarters of a mile from Aylmer, when they were startled to see a body covered with ice swaying high above them.

When the body was cut down by the police, and the ice and snow which had preserved it removed, it was found to be that of Edmond Develin, aged 46, married, teamster at Connaugh Park for fourteen years. The coroner's jury, under Dr. T. B. Davies, returned a verdict of suicide while temporarily insane.

WORKING FOR UNITY

Bon Accord Luncheon Held at Government House.

Lieutenant-Governor Cockshutt of Ontario Invites Leading Citizens of Quebec and Ontario to Meet Together in an Effort to Bring About Better Understanding Between Provinces.

TORONTO, March 19. — While there was plenty of bon accord, measured on the scale of words, at the big gathering of Quebec and Ontario citizens held at Government House on Saturday afternoon, there was a suggestion, thrown out by Premier Taschereau of Quebec, that possibly more might be accomplished in the way of bringing about unity between the two provinces if the old adage of "actions speak louder than words" were put into effect. The gathering was a notable one, as it had representatives from all the important walks of life in the two provinces, and there were upwards of two hundred of the leading men from Ontario and Quebec present to give sanction, by their mere presence, to the fine sentiments of unity and co-operation which were so ardently voiced by a number of speakers.

The purpose of the whole gathering, as it was outlined by the Lieutenant-Governor, was in order that the people of Ontario and Quebec might come to a keener appreciation of the fact that since they have been fortunate enough to be cast side by side in a big nation like the Dominion of Canada, there is only one course which they can pursue in the future, and that is for each to study the wants and the best properties of the other. Mr. Cockshutt made it plain that there was no suggestion of politics behind the gathering, and in explaining how he came to get the idea, he recalled that during several county dinners which had been held at Government House he had made the observation that people from the same counties met and came to understand each other for the first time. So he was confident that if so much good could be accomplished in this manner for the counties of Ontario, then much more could be accomplished for Ontario and Quebec.

"I was born in Ontario," the Lieutenant-Governor went on, "but I was brought up a Canadian, and have the spirit which should prevail in the two provinces. Provincialism may be all right in its own sphere, so long as it is restricted to the province, but there is something much bigger than mere provincialism, and that is Canadianism. In Canada, the land of opportunity, we can afford to have plain speaking, honest action and generous deeds. We have inherited from those who went before a stainless past, a splendid present and a vision of a glorious future. Let us hope we will always be free from the strife of provincialism, and let us see that we will be united as one body with one big soul, large enough to overlook small differences for the sake of our beloved country. We must pass on to posterity unsullied this inherited trust of marvelous opportunity."

Speaking for the province of Canada," Mr. Justice Brodeur said that the day would become an historic one in the annals of the nation, and he was confident that through such gatherings as had been taken in the past to bring about more cordial relations between the two provinces, the day's gathering would be long remembered. Ontario and Quebec, he declared, have been called upon to form a partnership, and it is unique inasmuch as it is the type of partnership which cannot be broken without greater disaster coming upon the whole of Canada. The two peoples are bound to live side by side, so it is the duty of the officials of the two races to find the means by which they can live peacefully. Confederation, he felt, had been a great success, but the work is not finished, so he was grateful to the Lieutenant-Governor for the opportunity which had been provided to the representatives of the two provinces to express their sentiments so fully in words, and, he hoped, in action yet to come.

The other speakers were Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, and Premier Taschereau of Quebec.

Woman Who Jumped Fails.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., March 19. —It has been established that the woman who committed suicide by jumping over the falls on Thursday is Miss Helen Boland, 28 years old, of Arlington avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y. Identification of the handbag left in the hack was made by her brother, Joseph V. Boland.

The young woman was employed as a librarian in a New York public library, and had recently been in a sanatorium suffering from a nervous breakdown. While rivermen are watching the lower river, hope is held that either her body or that of the man who jumped over a few days previously will be recovered. It is believed the bodies will be carried out to the lake in the ice.

Since the suicide Chief of Police Curry has received shoals of letters, telegrams and photographs, asking for information regarding the woman who went over. Apparently there was a great many missing women in Canada and the United States.

SHYLOCK MAKES A CLAIM.

Uncle Sam May Demand Valuable Islands From France.

PARIS, March 19.—The only way France can pay her debt to the United States is by ceding Guadaloupe and Martinique, the Washington State Department believes, according to a story from Adolpio Agorio, Rio de Janeiro correspondent of the Paris Eclaire.

In support of his statements he quotes a conversation alleged to have taken place between a South American diplonat, unnamed, and Secretary of State Hughes.

The secretary is declared to have said France's debt with interest in a few years will become so enormous that no country in the world could hope to settle it. On the other hand, Mr. Hughes insisted the United States Government cannot, by reason of pledges to the American people, abandon the claim. He is alleged to have added:

"The essence of the Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americanism will not be attained so long as any European colonies remain in America. We have postponed our difference with Britain because she has begun to pay. As for France, we hope she will be reasonable and not refuse to discuss this question in the Antilles.

"From the viewpoint of naval and military defence of these islands are of extreme importance to us. On the other hand, France gets nothing out of them. I hope the French Government will soon realize the situation."

EXPECT VITAL DEBATE.

Socialists May Force New Alignment of British Parties.

LONDON, March 19.—Unusual interest attaches to a resolution tabled by Philip Snowden (Labor, Colne Valley) for this week in the House of Commons declaring that future lesisiation should be directed towards "gradual suppression of the capitalist system."

The Socialists announce their intention of bringing their whole strength to the support of this resolution.

On the other hand the Unionists, Asquithian Liberals and Georgian Liberals severally intend submitting amendments.

Some prophets declare this week's proceedings will prove momentous as shaping forth broadly a new political alignment. The Socialists are said to be out to crush Liberalism and whatever the motive behind Snowden's resolution the effect will be to accentuate the vital points of difference between the Socialists and the Liberal Party.

There is a rumor afloat that H. W. Massingham, and Alfred Gardiner, the two best known Liberal writers in Great Britain are joining the Labor party. It appears definite that Massingham and those associated heretofore with the Nation weekly newspaper are dropping owing to the change of proprietorship. The possibility of Massingham founding another journal, however, is not overlooked.

Book on Delorme Case.

MONTREAL, March 19. — Detective George Lajoie, the officer who conducted the enquiry into the murder of Raoul Delorme on January 9, 1922, for which Rev. Abbe Delorme was arrested and afterwards committed to an asylum as a lunatic, has written a book on the case. It has been published by a Toronto firm.

The detective says he decided to publish what he found out about the murder as a vindication of his honor.

It became known to-day that some members of the Executive Committee of the city have pronounced emphatic disapproval of the publication of the story of the Delorme murder and made a demand on the author for a copy.

Ex-Kaiser Peddles Dishes.

DOORN, March 18.—Having attempted gardening and wood-sawing since exiled, the ex-Kaiser of Germany is now trying his hand in the sphere of industry. At the yearly Utrecht Fair, just opened, William Hohenzollern has a booth devoted to the Berlin Cadiner factory of china and majolica, although the booth is entered in the catalogue under a private name and none appeared to be aware that the exhibited pieces came from the Cadiner factory in Berlin, which is now supposed to be run by the German state.

No less a personage than the ex-kaiser's Dutch secretary, Peere Doorn, is acting as the salesman at the ex-kaiser's booth.

HARDING IN THE RING

President of the United States Will Run a Second Time.

U. S. Attorney-General Daugherty Says Harding Will Be Candidate In 1924 In Spite of His Unimpressive Record In Office—Only One Man Is Likely to Oppose Him.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., March 19.—Prediction that President Harding will be a candidate for renomination, that he will be selected as the Republican standard-bearer and that he will be re-elected, was made here, on Saturday by Attorney-General Daugherty, pre-convention campaign manager for Mr. Harding in 1920 and since then his chief political adviser.

"President Harding will be a candidate for renomination," said the Attorney-General. "There will be no other candidate against him except one, and that one is always a candidate. He will be nominated and re-elected. The country and the party will demand it."

Mr. Daugherty made his statement to the newspaper correspondents for whom he sent. The statement is regarded as by far the most authoritative announcement as to President Harding's intentions with respect to 1924 yet made.

The President and Mr. Daugherty had several conferences before the vacation party left Washington early this month, and they have seen each other two or three times during the former's three-day visit here. Similar statements have been made in the last few months by several Republicans regarded as close to the President.

Asked if there was any contingency under which Mr. Harding would not seek another term in the White House, Mr. Daugherty said he believed only an impairment of the President's health would stand in the way.

Mr. Daugherty said some of the issues on which the campaign would be fought out already had appeared. Among these he mentioned taxation, law enforcement, freedom of action for the United States in international affairs and the administration of the department of justice.

The Attorney-General did not elaborate on his statement that there would be only one candidate in the Republican convention against Mr. Harding. Some of those who heard him believed he referred to Senator Lafollette, of Wisconsin.

GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS.

Canadian Will Conduct Singing at Empire Fair In 1924.

ST. JOHN, N.B., March 19. — Dr. Charles Harriss, of Ottawa, who will conduct the great choral and orchestral concerts in the London Stadium during the 1924 Exhibition, was among the passengers who arrived in this city Sunday morning on the Canadian Pacific Steamship liner Montclaire, from Liverpool. Dr. Harriss went to the Old Country last December and has since held a number of consultations with the British Empire Exhibition authorities regarding the great choral festival which will direct a chorus of 10,000 voices, and an orchestra of 500 pieces. He says that the stadium will accommodate 125,000 people. One swimming pool alone is being installed which will accommodate no less than 2,000 people. Prior to his departure from London, he learned that one million pounds had been expended and that it is expected that another million and a half pounds will be required before the stadium is finally completed.

The stadium will be opened in April by the King when the final of the big football series will be played. For this match all the seats were sold many weeks ago, the price of each ranging from five guineas to five shillings.

Dr. Harriss, speaking of the great concerts to be held in connection with the exhibition, said that the services had been engaged for one year and that he will take up his duties in September.

Canada's New Status.

LONDON, March 19.—Although there has been so far little press comment on the cable that Canada has concluded a fisheries treaty with the United States in her own responsibility, despite the advice of Sir Auckland Geddes, the announcement has created profound interest here. It will almost certainly be discussed in Parliament next week and will have the effect of hastening the date of the Imperial Conference if Canada finds it convenient to send representatives before next year. The Evening Standard referred to Canada's action on Saturday as a constitutional event of far-reaching importance and states: "Its important constitutional effect is admitted by the Home Government."

Boy's Skull Crushed.

HAMILTON, March 19.—Crushed in an unknown manner between a coal wagon and a wall in the rear of the premises of the Cloverdale Creamery Co., S Adams street, Saturday afternoon, Donald Hawkins, 16 years of age, who lived at 39 Railway street, received a fractured skull, to which injury he succumbed in the City Hospital Sunday morning.

In company with Albert Stewart, a driver for the Canada Ice & Coal Co., young Hines went to the Cloverdale Creamery & Stewart delivered coal. The latter was inside the building. When he came out he was shocked to discover the boy pinned between the wagon and the wall. It is thought that Hines was thrown from the seat.

Grand River Cleared.

BRANTFORD, Ont., March 19.—The spring break-up of the Grand river came without excitement or even a flurry on Saturday afternoon, when the waters raised enough to carry the ice and disentegrate floes. The bank ice has been left stranded, and will need a day's rain to carry out. All day Sunday Lorne bridge was lined with citizens watching the moving ice cakes on their way to Lake Erie, but they saw nothing out of the ordinary. There was no danger at any time during the night and the stream is clear as far north as Galt.

Woostoff "framed" Gravakis by placing two packets of cocaine in the cellar of his restaurant, and then notifying the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

On account of his family, sentence was postponed to May 15 and the judge said that if he were an unmarried man he would sentence him to fifteen years.

CHAPTER I.

In the beginning of things, he was merely a number; but even that was creditable, because his number was low enough to signify that he had responded pretty promptly to the rallying call. After that, and with the cataclysmic suddenness which marked all changes of military status on the western front, he became, one frosty morning, in Case, and got himself roughly classified (and tenderly handled) as a Stretcher Case, a Grand Blesse, and, in consequence, a proper temporary inmate of a field hospital on the Belgian plains.

There, he was unofficially known as Joyeaux, or Joyous One; not because he displayed a very buoyant disposition—far from it!—but because he belonged to the Foreign legion; and in the course of another day or two he was routine-ticketed as an Evacue, and provided with a lukewarm hot-water bottle and a couple of evil-smelling cigarettes to console him on the road to the base hospital at Neuilly.

At Neuilly he became, for the first time since his enlistment, an Individual, and at the very outset he was distinguished by certain qualities which had passed unnoticed in the frying pan and fire of the trenches. For one thing, he was obviously immune to kindness; and for another, he was apparently immune to hope. He was a man of inverted values; and the grim silence of fortitude in suffering (which is altogether too common a virtue in base hospitals to earn any especial merit), but rather the dogged reticence of black mood and chronic bitterness. To be sure, speech was physically difficult to him, but other men with similar misfortunes spoke blessings with their eyes, and gave back gratitude in voiceless murmurs. Not so the Joyous One. From the day of his arrival he demanded nothing, desired nothing, but to brood sullenly aloof; and so, when he became an Individual, he also became a mystery to the nursing staff. It was considered that he was an implacable woman hater, and there seemed to be something in it.

Regardless of the care of the American nurses (all fovoringly attentive to one of their own nation who had fought for France), his spirit remained abysmal and clouded in gloom. Only twice, in the initial month of his confinement, did he betray the weakness of an ordinary emotion; on each occasion a gold-laced general came to salute, in the name of the republic, one of the Individual's neighbors, and to deliver a bit of bronze which dangled from a ribbon striped red and green. It was said (and doubted by those who hadn't seen it) that at these ceremonies the Individual had grown feverish, and let tears come to his eyes, but subsequently he had relapsed into still greater depths of stoicism than before; even on bed-jacket was the insecent of cross or medal, and his depression was apparent, and acute. The nurses, arguing that perhaps his pride was wounded as seriously as his flesh, offered quick condolence and got themselves rebuffed with shrugs of the Individual's shoulders, and inarticulate sounds which had all the earmarks of suppressed profanity. He didn't even soften when Pierre Dupont, a hard-hit territorial in the next bed, squandered a day's supply of energy to lean across and whisper sympathetically to him: "Old man . . . Vieux espece de chourcroute . . . . I know how it is . . . and I haven't got any friends either. I want you to take my Croix de Guerre. . . . When I go nowhere."

Even when speech returned to the Individual he was a man of curt responses and stinging monosyllables—a problem to the surgeons, a problem to the nurses and (if the expression in his eyes meant anything), an overwhelming problem to himself. It appeared that, after all, it wasn't simply women that he hated—it was the universe.

His military book implied that he had no parents, no close relations, no friends to notify, no fixed abode. He received no visitors, no letters, no packages freighted with magical delight. But to those who pitied him in all his loneliness he was utterly contemptuous; he even went so far as to flip sidelong to the floor a religious post card tendered him by a devout and sentimental passerby, and he did it in her presence, unashamed. Later, when a smiling orderly picked up that post card and tucked it under his pillow she was no less contemptuous in permitting it to remain. But the one stupendous fact which, more than all else combined, made him an object of bewildered curiosity was this—that of the scores and scores of men with head-wounds who were reborn at Neuilly that spring and summer, he was the only one who had never asked for a mirror.

This, of itself, wouldn't have been astonishing as long as he delayed in the preliminary stages of recovery, for now and then a man with head-wounds proves to be super-sensitive; but in the second stage it was remarkable, and in the third stage it was unique. The staff held it to be extraordinary from a social as well as from a pathological viewpoint, that a man so terribly disfigured should have no interest—not even a morbid interest—in his own appearance. And it wasn't that the Individual was simply indifferent to the mirror; on the contrary, his aversion to it was active and energetic; he flinched, and motioned it frantically away as though the mere conception of seeing himself as others saw him was too repellant, and too unthinkable to endure.

There came a day in April when a photograph was requested of Jim. Surely he knew where there was a likeness of himself, didn't he? His old passport photograph, which had mysteriously disappeared, or—

The Individual glanced up from his present task; the wound in his arm was still annoying and he was absorbed in learning to write with his left hand.

"What for?" he muttered.

"Why," said the nurse, cheerfully, "for a model. To help the surgeons. They'll take your picture for a guide and make you look almost exactly the way you did before."

The Individual from America sat up straight, so that the nurse was startled by his animation, which was without a parallel in his local history.

"What!" he said.

"Certainly!" The nurse spoke in the tone one uses to an ailing child. "You've known that, haven't you?"

The Individual's voice was queerly unmanageable and strained. "You mean to say they're going to make me look the way . . . Could they do that? Could they? Even now?"

"Why, of course," she assured him. "You never told me that!" he said, passionately. "Why didn't you? Why couldn't you have told me! And here I've been . . ." He put his hands to his bandaged face and seemed to shrink within himself. Then all at once he burst out: "Well, there's nothing to prevent . . . Then they could make me not look like it, if they wanted to! Isn't that so?"

She regarded him in vast perplexity, and thought of summoning a surgeon for the man had begun to quiver as though from shell-shock—which he hadn't undergone.

"Why, I don't understand what you mean," she said soothingly. "But if you'll just be calm and—"

The Individual gestured with there impatience.

"If they can do what you say, and make me look like any old thing they choose to, then what in the devil are they asking for a photograph for?"

"Why, to go by," she said helplessly. "You want to look like your old self, don't you?"

"No, I don't!"

The nurse gasped. His tone had been churlish, but the echo of it vaguely suggested triumph and relief. His symptoms had subsided . . . could it be that he actually was relieved! Dumfounded, she made another effort to convince him.

"Let Them Make Me Look Like That."

"But you want to look just as near ly like—"

"Don't you suppose I know what I want?" he interrupted rudely.

"But haven't you a photograph, any way, that I can—"

"No, I haven't!" he snapped. "I haven't." It was a lie; the passport photograph was in the lining of a certain wallet, and he had hid it there for reasons of his own. But now that one great danger was definitely past and a still further bulwark of protection offered, if the nurse spoke truth, the Individual could afford to come out from ambush. "And I don't want to look the way I did before, and so look the way I did before, and what's more I never did! But if your doctors are half as smart as they think they are let 'em make me look like that! Or anything else either—I don't give a damn!"

Shocked and horrified, she was gazing at a picture postcard he had snatched from under his pillow and thrust upon her. It was a reproduction of a religious palatine by Bernardin. It was the radiant face of the Christ.

CHAPTER II.

Nine o'clock on a night in June—not a June evening, heavy-starred on velvet, but a furious June night, with Stygian blackness looping overhead, and Stygian water battering and boiling against the iron plates. The ship was dark as the night itself; blind dark, without a single ray to play the traitor. On deck a solitary venturer hugged the rail, and apathetically watched the waves tear past.

Out of the warmth and cheer and the vitiated atmosphere of the smoking room came Martin Harmon, big, florid, exuberant. A heaving lift of the deck sent him lurching sideways; he saved his balance by struggling toward the rail, when suddenly the slope was reversed, and he slipped and slid to the barrier of safety, clutched it, and found himself at arm's length from the lonely watcher, who hadn't stirred, or even turned his head.

"Hello!" said Harmon, his surprise tinctured with easy familiarity. "Some night!"

"Yes, it is." The tone of the response was curt, so curt that Harmon instinctively leaned forward to discover what expression of countenance went with it. The night was so black that he might as well have tried to penetrate a curtain of solid fabric.

"Seen any U-boats yet?" he asked humorously.

"Not yet." The taciturn one moved a trifle awry; a man less thin-skinned and less dined and wined than Harmon would probably have taken the hint and removed himself, but Harmon's was an insatiable curiosity, and he never attempted to curb it—he was the sort of traveling companion who makes Christians reflect upon the definition of justifiable homicide.

"What is your line?" he inquired after a pause.

The other man laughed queerly.

"The first . . . . if it makes so much difference to you."

"Pardon? I don't quite get you. You said . . ."

"I said the first line. I meant the first-line trenches. I've been in it."

Harmon jerked his head upward in comprehension.

"Oh. I see! You mean the war! And you've been right on the spot where the fighting is? Pretty lively up there, isn't it? Something stirring most of the time?"

"I imagine so." The other man's accent was amazingly diffident, and Harmon peered at him, incredulous.

"Good Lord, don't you know?"

"Not a great deal. I happened to get hit the first day I was in the trenches."

"But you got in it again afterward, I suppose? I'll bet you did!"

"No."

"What! You never got back at all? Just one day, and you're through?"

"Yes. After I was discharged from hospital I was discharged from the army too. Permanently unfit."

"English army?"

"No—French."

"Well, that's some record!" said Harmon appreciatively. "That certainly is some record! Not to say tough luck—the toughest kind. Going back home, I take it?"

"Looks that way, doesn't it?" Harmon ignored the sarcasm.

"Back to work, eh? What did you say your line is?"

"I didn't say. I haven't any just now."

Harmon pondered a second.

"Oh! Gentleman of leisure? Soldier of fortune, eh? Well, I wouldn't worry if I were you. You're disappointed; that's natural . . . but the world hasn't come to an end yet. Of course it is something of a come-down to leave the army and get into harness again, but after all there's plenty of excitement right in the United States. Big work to be done, too! Big money to make. And it helps the war along, too. I tell you there never was a bigger opportunity to make money than there is right this minute. The hard job isn't to find the scheme; it's to find the men to run it. Don't you worry . . . you'll land something right off the bat!"

"Thanks for the compliment!"

"Oh, it's no compliment! Anybody can make money these days. It's a plain statement of fact . . . . Say, let's go in and have something. Come in and be sociable. What you want's a drink. Am I right or am I wrong?"

"Well—"

"And that's what the doctor ordered! Come on! It's on me."

The other man hesitated, and at last succumbed, out of sheer unconcern, to a companionship he realized in advance would be distasteful.

"All right," he consented briefly; and together, arm in arm, they stumbled and tacked across the treacherous deck, and presently crossed the threshold into the hazy light of the smoking room. Harmon, smiling broadly, wiped the brine from his smarting eyes.

"Now, then," he said, "what particular brand of poison do you—" And broke off short and stared, fascinated, at the extraordinary young man in front of him.

He was anywhere from twenty-five to forty, this American from the distant trenches, and his age was as hard to guess as a clever woman's; there was something about him peculiar to youth, and yet when his face was in repose, he might easily have claimed two score of years and gone undisputed. It was a face which suggested both the fire of immaturity and the drain of experience; there was breathtaking gravity about it, a hint of the dignity of marble, of ageless permanence. It was a slightly thin face, scarred by a heavy line or two, and indelibly stamped with the evidence of intense thought and inward suffering; but it lacked the hollows which, at the first glance, should have supported the evidence. It was a thin and oval face, with a mouth of large and sympathetic sweetness, a forehead white and high, a prominent, delicate nose, and irises of clear, luminous gray. It wasn't altogether an Anglo-Saxon type of countenance, nor was it definitely European; it seemed rather to have taken all the better qualities from several races. It was a face to inspire immediate trust and confidence and respect, and Harmon, despite his lack of practice in all three of these reactions, was evidently attracted by it.

"Vichy-Celestins for me," said the old-young man indifferently.

"I'll . . . I guess I'll have vichy too," said Harmon, relaxing. "If it wasn't for something I can't just describe I'd say . . . well, never mind. Er . . . . what business have you been in, by the way?"

The younger man's reply was tardy and not particularly gracious.

"Why, the longest time I ever put in at any one business was selling insurance. The last thing I did was to sell bonds. Why?"

Harmon stiffened. "A salesman! Good Lord! That's the last thing in the world I'd have . . . but say! You must have been a whirlwind! Why, a man with a presence like yours would hardly have to open his mouth! You've got a sort of . . . I'll be hanged if I know what to call it . . . but a kind of feeling, if you know what I mean. Salesman! Why, all you need is an introduction and a dotted line for—"

The young man laughed rather forlornly and sipped his vichy.

"Just at present I haven't either."

Harmon's gaze was unflattering, and his interest and admiration mounted higher. Mechanically, in accordance with his habits, he was striving to discover how this new acquaintance might be put to practical use. "Was I right, or was I wrong? Playing in hard luck don't strengthen a man's courage much, even if he tries to bluff himself into thinking it does. Cut out the regret stuff; that's my advice, and you can take it or leave it. Forget all that tough luck you had over here, and get busy figuring out how you're going to cash in on all your experience. America's full of chances—you'll land something big in no time. Can't help it if you try. Salesman! Son, you're carrying your best recommendation right on top of your own shoulders!"

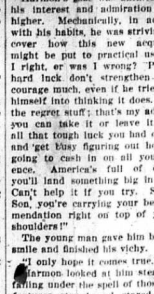
The young man gave him a wry smile and finished his vichy.

"I only hope it comes true," he said. Harmon looked at him sleadily, and fading under the spell of those radiant features stared and stared until he came to himself and all at once brought his fist down on the table, so that the glasses rang again.

"Well, why shouldn't it? As a matter of fact, why shouldn't it?"

The younger man's expression hadn't changed. "Meaning what?"

"Meaning," said Harmon deliberately, "that the first thing I've got to do



"Meaning What?"

when I get home is to hunt up a couple of good salesmen myself. Are you hunting for a good job, or aren't you?"

"Aren't you a little hasty?" The young man's intonation was sardonic.

"I never could get most of my money," said Harmon very slowly to the ceiling, "by making quick decisions. I make up my mind pretty fast. If you can interest me on short notice you can interest other people. Mind you, we're just discussing this—sort of thinking out loud. No obligation on either side. Doesn't do any harm to talk about it, does it?"

"Then suppose," said the young man placidly, "you define your idea of a good job. I'm rather particular."

"But you admit you're out of luck and—"

"But you admit I'm a whirlwind." The young man smiled with faint amusement.

"I said you ought to be—with training."

The young man's mouth turned upward at the corners.

"Go ahead and describe the job."

"Well, my idea of a pretty sweet job for a man of your age is—to start, of course—about twenty a week and commissions."

"Yes? What per cent commission?"

"Oh, eight to ten per cent."

The young man glanced at Harmon and laughed quietly.

"You're a broker, of course, but that doesn't sound much like conservative investment securities to me. What is it—industrials?"

Harmon grimaced.

"Yes, I'm a broker." He set down his glass and fumbled for a card. "There! But I was thinking more about stocks and bonds. Some new Montana properties—copper and zinc. Metals are the big noise these days. I guess you realize that, don't you? Munition work."

The younger man glanced at the card. "My name is Hilliard. Well—is competition so keen you can afford to pay that high for business, or is the stuff just hard to sell?"

Harmon, who had begun to nod assent to the first question, looked rather blank at the second, but rallied quickly.

"Competition. But there's money in it, and you'll get your share of it too—believe me! I've got a sneaking suspicion that you and I can do business together. Want to consider it?"

"All this on such short acquaintance? Aren't you taking a fearful chance?"

Harmon saw that the young man's irises were extremely luminous and clear; he leaned forward seriously. "I'm simply backing my hunch, son. In the long run it pays me—pays me well. I've got a hunch a fancy to you. As far as I know you may be the rottenest salesman in the whole United States; I wouldn't hire your experience without some references, and maybe a surer company back of you; but I'd hire that face of yours, and your manner, and your voice offhand. I'd hire your front—not your past! And let me tell you right now, son, I never made a tricle as fast as when I was with a man I liked. There's something about you that . . . Well?"

The young man was thoughtful and unblinking.

"You're actually making me a proposition, are you?"

"I should say—Harmon's fist on the table provided the exclamation point. "Here—I don't know you, and you don't know me, but if you're hunting for a job you've found it. . . . It's your next move."

The young man's lips parted in grave good humor; Harmon was spellbound at the effect.

"I'll try not to keep you waiting. This speed of yours rather entices me. Besides, if my face is my fortune, I'd better find it out as soon as possible. This organization of yours is in New York city, isn't it?"

"My headquarters are, but I'd want you to work outside. I've got one special scheme on hand—up the pole. That's where this line is. It's always been one of our hardest markets, and it's got money to burn. Can't swing it, somehow—they don't respond to any ordinary selling talk; they're too hide-bound conservative. You know the kind. Government-bond crowd. And for a year or so they've been making war profits till you can't see 'em for dust. Manufacturing town. And I'd like mighty well to ship you up there for a month or two; give you time enough to get your bearings, and turn you loose. You ought to do great work in a place like that. They need a chap like you—confound it!" He halted abruptly and shook his head in great bewilderment. "I can't make it out at all! You've got the appearance of a . . . . well, a sort of a strait-laced youngster, if you know what I mean, and yet the way you say things, I—"

The young man gestured blandly. "And the town you have in mind?"

"It's Syracuse, New York."

"Syracuse!" The young man's chin was squared by a ruler, and noticeably thrust forward.

"Yes; know anybody there?"

Hilliard laughed unpleasantly and resumed his former attitude.

"Why, it so happens," he said, biting the words off sharply, "that I was born and brought up in Syracuse, and if there's any one place in the world I care less about than any other place that's the one . . . . I'm sorry, but I'm certain we're at cross purposes from here on."

Harmon showed his vexation. "What's the matter? Haven't you kept on good terms with your old friends?"

"No."

Harmon frowned.

"Well, is it so bad you couldn't do any business there? How do they remember you?"

The young man regarded him stonily for an instant; then gradually a far-away expression crept into his eyes; he started and caught his breath.

"I'll let you judge for yourself." He brought out a flat leather wallet, from which he extracted a tiny photograph torn from an old passport. "What do you think of that?"

Harmon scanned it superficially.

"Nice-looking boy. Who is he?"

"It was taken two years ago," said Hilliard, resting his elbows on the table. "You wanted to know how they remember me, so I'm showing you. That's a photograph of me, taken two years ago."

"Impossible!" Harmon snorted it. "That doesn't look any more like you than . . . . than I do! Let's omit the comedy! I'm talking business!"

The young man's mouth curled. "Don't be mistaken, Mr. Harmon—there's very little joking in me when I never mention Syracuse." Harmon shivered at the tone, but waved the photograph in scoffing accusation.

"You're not trying to sit there and tell me—"

"I told you I was in hospital for nearly a year, I believe," said Hilliard icily. "It was shrapnel—across the face. As a matter of fact I didn't have much of any face left. But the surgeons—they're pretty clever. Yes—they're clever!" Hilliard's eyes were needle points. "They make a man over from his own photograph. In my own case I preferred it differently. So when they asked me for something to use as a pattern in remodeling me I gave 'em this!" He tossed out a picture postcard, soiled and frayed. "Well, that's where the trouble began. They cursed me up and down for a . . . . still that part of it won't interest you!" His eyes were blazing now, and his voice shook with passion. "Naturally I hadn't meant it as d——d literalism all that . . . . but they had me under either influence to help myself . . . . and they went through with it . . . . and cursed me some more afterward . . . They couldn't copy it exactly, of course, but they did the best they could . . . . Gloated over it! Took infinite pains to make it perfect . . . . and sneered at me while they did it! Sneered—and laughed . . . . Well, you've got the results in front of you. That's what I was—and that's what I am! What's your opinion now?" The last sentence came snarling through set teeth.

The broker's pupils had dilated grossly; his eyes wandered vacantly from the photograph to the postcard and back to Hilliard's face. His whole imagination was pinned down and crushed; he swore softly under his breath and wet his lips.

"It's a . . . a miracle!" he stammered. "A miracle! . . ."

"The photograph," said Hilliard harshly, "is the way they remember me up in Syracuse. Do you think they'd ever recognize me now?"

"It's a miracle . . . . it's paralyzing! . . ." Harmon swallowed hard, and looked down almost fearfully at the time-worn postcard. "There's so much difference . . . . nobody'd ever think of it without knowing . . . . but when you see the original! . . . . It . . . . It knocks me all to hell. It's staggering! And they did that to you! Just to think they could do that to you! . . . . I've got to have a drink!"

Hilliard motioned impatiently, but his fit of rage was slowly going down.

"There's no miracle about it at all. It was good plastic surgery." If they'd sent me out looking as I used to you wouldn't call it a miracle, would you? No. It's only what they did do that makes it staggering. But it's clever—oh, yes—clever! And you can see for yourself how few marks of it there are." He drew a long breath and managed to smile again; but the effect was shocking, for while his features were composed and kindly his eyes were venomous. "Well, I certainly never intended to go to Syracuse again for pleasure, but if there's enough compensation to pay for the risk I'm not afraid to try it on . . . . business." His accent sent cold chills coursing down Harmon's spine. "In fact now that I think of it, it ought to be rather amusing!"

"FEELING" FOR LAYERS

This Method Is About as Certain as the Trap Nest.

Experiments With Capons — Feeding Costs—Excellent Flesh Produced Without Confinement — Handling Baby Chicks.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The writer carried on a series of experiments with poultry when connected with the Agricultural Experiment Station for Vancouver Island, Sidney, B.C., and presents the following notes as among those worthy of consideration:

DETERMINATION OF EGG-LAYING

A test was made of the feeling method, to determine its accuracy. Thirty hens that were under trapnest record were subjected to the feeling process for eight days: January 1 to 24.

The results of "feeling" were checked up and tallied perfectly with the "trapnesting," indicating that it is quite possible for any careful person to determine which hens are laying by feeling the bird for the presence of the egg in the oviduct, in the early morning before she leaves the perch. The method also has an advantage in that it eliminates the necessary confinement of the birds in a "trapnest" for a period which is frequently longer than is actually required to produce an egg.

The great disadvantage of the feeling method is that it is impracticable for pedigree breeding, inasmuch that the eggs from individual birds cannot be recorded.

CAPONS.

Thirty cockerels were operated on when twelve weeks old. These birds were a thrifty and well-grown lot, averaging 2½ pounds in weight. After caponizing, they were kept under the same conditions as the cockerels. The feed cost for a pound increase in weight was slightly less for the cockerels up to six months of age. At this time the cockerels and capons weighed the same. These birds were killed for Christmas trade when 264 days old, and weighed, plucked, 8 pounds 2 ounces. The percentage of offal was low, being but 18 per cent. of the total weight. The birds were not crate fed, but were finished on a liberal milk ration. The quality of the flesh was excellent, and the wholesale price received was 30 cents per pound. The advantages of caponizing are that an excellent quality of flesh can be produced without confining the birds in small feeding crates and the tender flesh can be retained to a greater age and weight. The cockerels made just as good gains, and when milk fed in crates for two weeks, produced the same high grade of flesh. Following is the feed cost of an eight-pound two-ounce capon:

Feed cost to rear to end of third month	21.54c.
Feed cost to rear during fourth month	16.2
Feed cost to rear during fifth month	13.17
Feed cost to rear during sixth month	21.2
Feed cost to rear during seventh month	21.3
Feed cost to rear during eighth month	22.4
Feed cost to rear during December, 20 days	14.4
Total feed cost	$1.21½

These birds were sold for $2.42 each wholesale, leaving $1.11½ per bird. From this we can deduct 20 cents, the price paid for the bird as a day-old chick, and have 91½ cents per bird for labor and shelter.

HANDLING BABY CHICKS.

In another experiment a thousand one-day-old chicks were procured from two reliable local breeders. The first day they remained in the incubator, and on the second day they were transferred to the brooder, but were not fed until forty-eight hours old. The following hints on general treatment are given:

Do not chill or overheat the chickens, or disastrous results will follow. If they pant they are too hot, and if they huddle together they are not warm enough.

Do not overfeed during the first week.

Change the water daily and see that it is perfectly clean.

Give plenty of green food.

Feed sour skim milk whenever possible.

Do not forget to supply charcoal, grit, and shell.

Make all change of food and feeding gradually.

Clean and disinfect brooder often.

Do not use damp, mouldy feed or straw.

Never allow chicks to crowd in brooders or colony houses.

Place chicks on the range in colony houses, after the eighth week.

Do not let the cockerels and pullets run together on the range.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture.

A farm needs a windbreak in summer as much as in winter. Did you ever notice the difference in the garden and fruit plantation on two farms, one sheltered from the hot southwest wind and the other exposed to it? The windbreak pays in dollars and cents.

When a new house is built among trees, orchard trees should be cut except those where the house actually stands. After the home is occupied, one can tell better which trees to retain for shade where it is most needed.

When our great-grandmothers were first tomatoes were called "love apples," and one or two plants were grown in the garden or flower beds on account of their bright red fruits. No one thought of eating them, for they were considered poisonous. When after a time it was found that they were not poisonous, people began to eat them and they soon became one of the standard garden vegetables.

SAULT STE. MARIE.

The Northern Town Possesses a Romantic Past.

Sault Ste. Marie has a thriving present, but it is not to be neglectful of its romantic past. Claims are even made that the city almost rivals Quebec in age as a community in Canada. Quebec as every Canadian reader of school histories knows, was founded by Champlain in 1608, and though there is no documentary evidence to support the claim to a particular year, it is maintained by Mr. J. W. Curran in an address to the Sault Ste. Marie Historical Society that there was an Indian settlement at the site of the Sault at least as early, while the name "Sault" first appears on Champlain's map in 1632.

"Therefore," said Mr. Curran, "we can claim what no other community in Ontario at least can claim—that for almost 300 years our name has been on an official map. It is true Champlain was referring then only to the rapids and not to the community here."

Champlain's map showed seven cabins in 1632 on the Canadian side of the river, which suggests a population of around 200, and Mr. Curran said that, as a matter of history, it is recorded that in 1641 there were about 200 people there.

Another important statement is that in 1632 the north, or Canadian, side of the river had the larger population, just as it has to-day. Mr. Curran's proposal is for the erection of a series of tablets in the Sault in honor, among others, of the following: Jean Nicolet, the first white man to visit the Sault, 1624; Fathers Jogues and Ramybault, the first Jesuit missionaries to the Sault, 1641; Louis Joliet, the French explorer, who first placed the name Sault Ste. Marie on the map, 1688.

THE THREE-PIECE KNIT SUIT

Knit wear, used so many seasons strictly for sports apparel, has been utilized this season for afternoon wear and for more formal wear of all kinds. The model is of brown knit silk with blouse of sand color, with collar, cuffs and sash ends trimmed in fox.

FAVORITES AMONG THE FURS

Rage for Black Paltry Is in Evidence—Long-Haired Furs Are in Limelight.

This year one or two of our favorite furs have lost just a bit of ground, asserts a fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star. Take squirrel, for instance. Never were there such soft, lovely dove shadings in anything else, and last year, and the several years before that, the woman who had no trimmings of squirrel about her was the unusual and marked woman. This year the rage for black furs has pushed all other furs aside; hence we revel in lynx, caracul and other black furs. And it is strange, considering this vogue of black fur, that seal holds so small a place in trimmings. It is a wonderfully becoming fur, but this year's use of it is confined largely to bands on evening coats of gorgeous fabrics and cobwings. Even the rabbit's skin is given a more popular place in trimmings, due to the greater popularity of long-haired fur, no doubt.

But for coats, while kolinsky, mole, mink, raccoon, muskrat, and other furs have their following, seal is the supreme favorite, trimmed, of course, in every other fur seen in the market.

While brown and maple sugar and cocoa are the smart season shades, taupe has been gaining ground for the last year and the taupe furs and gray furs, especially fox, are clamoring again for first place.

And so, if your fur box contains pelts that are not so desirable now they will wait. And if it contains pieces that are too small to serve, buy a little to add to them, not new fur, because the difference will show too readily. But make a raid on your friend's fur box or visit the places that sell used clothing. Oh, of course, if you can buy all new and all handsome furs, why just forget all about this kind of advice; toss it away and throw your money as far as you please.

Col. Maurice Alexander.

Equipped with fine military and legal experience, Col. Maurice Alexander, a Canadian, is one of the strongest acquisitions of the National Liberals in the British Parliament. Col. Alexander is a McGill graduate, and formerly practiced at the Quebec bar, but the Great War gave him his opportunity both in military and civilian life in the Old Country, and he has held high positions, although a comparatively young man.

Born in 1889, he is yet in his early thirties. Being graduated with highest honors and the gold medal, he was admitted to the bar in 1910, and joined a Montreal firm. The next year he took a commission in the Grenadier Guards of Canada, and was launched on a military career. Joining the C. E. F. in 1914 he rose steadily in the intelligence branch to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and then became an assistant judge-advocate-general, and finally Judge-Advocate-General at the War Office. He was also with the intelligence staff at the War Office in the latter stages of the war after returning from France. For these services he was awarded the C. M. G. and was sent as secretary to the British Embassy at Washington.

In 1920 he became a member of the Inner Temple, thus transferring his interests to England, was briefed for important cases, and last September was made a King's Counsel. Running for the Commons in Southwark, he defeated a strong Labor opponent, and is fairly embarked on a promising Parliamentary career at the age of thirty-four. He is still unmarried.

A Kind Word.

A customer went into a teashop. Presently a bright-eyed waitress asked: "Can I take your order?" "Yes," was the reply. "Two boiled eggs and a kind word." The waitress brought the eggs, and was moving on when the customer said, "Miss! What about the kind word?" The waitress leaned over and whispered, "Don't eat the eggs."

Roads In India.

Construction of road and railroad embankments in western and central India, have produced breeding grounds of malaria carrying mosquitoes which have caused large areas to decrease in population and lapse into jungle.

BEFORE MY BABY CAME

I Was Greatly Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sydenham, Ont. —"I took your medicine before my baby was born, and it was a great help to me as I was very poorly until I had started to take it. I just felt as though I was tired out all the time and would have weak, faint spells. My nerves would bother me until I could get little rest, night or day. I was told by a friend to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I only took a few bottles and it helped me wonderfully. I would recommend it to any woman. I am doing what I can to recommend this good medicine. I will send that little book you sent me to any one I can help. You can with the greatest of pleasure use my name in regard to the Vegetable Compound, if it will help others take it."—Mrs. HARVEY MILLIGAN, Sydenham, Ont.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many women are poorly at such times and get into a weakened, run-down condition, when it is essential to the mother, as well as the child, that her strength be kept up.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother at this time. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It may be taken in safety by the nursing mother.

SLEEVES LOOK LIKE CAPES

Large Armcoverings Used on Some of Latest Evening Wraps—Tight Sleeve of Lace.

On some of the latest evening wraps the sleeves are so immense that they look like capes, says the Boston Globe. In fact, the mantle seems all sleeves. Curiously enough, we have side by side with these models, skin-tight sleeves which reveal every line and curve of the arms. It is a strange season so far as dress is concerned, but exceedingly convenient, since every one can choose something suitable and becoming.

The long tight sleeve is often made entirely of lace, and it is so cleverly hooked down the under seam that it fits as smoothly as a silk stocking which has been made to measure. Of course, it would be impossible to get into sleeves of this order unless they were so fastened. All these long sleeves have huge frills or cuffs which almost cover the hands.

Very wide and full "bishop" sleeves are to be seen on the new fur coats—especially those made of shaved lamb or breitschwantz. And it is getting more and more the fashion to mingle two or even three furs on the same mantle, big sleeves of squirrel on an astrakhan wrap, for example, or kolinsky sleeves on one made of loutre.

Holworthy Hall

It is a rare occasion when you can pick up three representative magazines or three periodicals of current date and not find in one of them a story by Holworthy Hall. Such is his popularity. He is probably the most widely read and discussed fiction writer of the day. It is a position well earned, for his work is uniformly meritorious. "The Man Nobody Knew," one of his oddest and most interesting creations, has been secured for serial reproduction in this paper. Be sure to get the first installment, otherwise you will miss the finest point of this great narrative.

THE WINTER CARNIVAL AT BANFF

1, Strongheart, donor of the Grand Prix dog trophy. 2. With his trainer and W. W. Grant at the Albertan Broadcasting Station. 3. Ski-ing party, Banff Springs Hotel. 4. Banff spins.

THE beautiful mountain town of Banff has become the hub of winter sports, and its claim as one of Canada's finest playgrounds in winter or summer is admitted. The Canadian winter begins there ordinarily about the middle of November, and from that time until the end of March, curling, skating, tobogganing, swimming in the hot sulphur pools and a host of other sports fill the days, and dancing, cards and music help to pass the evenings.

The Banff Winter Carnival this year was the best on record. It was attended by a larger crowd than ever before, and the attendance was more than justified by the programme which opened on February 24th and closed March 8th. The ten days were crammed with sporting competition events. The ladies' hockey championship and the ski-jumping contests were perhaps the most popular and spectacular features open to all, but there were very few visitors who did not enter one or more of the other lists.

On Saturday, March 3rd, a hundred mile team dog race was held on Lake Minnewanka, at Banff, Alta., the first long distance dog race in which all the contestants were in full view of the spectators the whole time. Among the contestants were seven famous dog teams from The Pas and the excitement they provided compensated for many a long journey. This part of the programme was supported by the Trimble-Murfin Motion Picture Production Company, which is at present located at Banff for the filming of Jack London's "White Fang." Strongheart, "the wonder dog of the movies," which is taking the leading part in the picturization, donated the trophy in the Grand Prix race, and from the W. W. Grant broadcasting station at Calgary challenged all dogdom and invited all Canada and the United States to attend the dog classic of all time at Banff.

Special arrangements were made with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the transportation of Strongheart and his party which consisted of Miss Lillian Rich, Mrs. J. I. Brewster, Mr. J. I. Brewster, president of the Banff Carnival Association; and Mr. Lawrence Trimble, the dog's trainer. Strongheart travelled in the Pullman car and was received at Calgary by Colonel G. R. Pearkes, V.C., at whose invitation he had undertaken the journey. After being introduced to a large number of boy scouts gathered to meet him, Strongheart was taken to the broadcasting station where, after introduction by his trainer, he barked his message to the world.

Strongheart, the central figure in the splendid collection of dogs that were gathered for the race, was once a German police dog and towards the end of the war he saw considerable Red Cross service. Three years ago he was brought to this country and was purchased by Jane Murfin, the playwright who wrote "Lilac Time" in collaboration with Jane Cowl, the actress. Miss Murfin and Mr. Trimble are the producers of the picture plays in which Strongheart is the star. Just as a dog he is worth close to fifteen thousand dollars; but as a dog actor he is almost beyond price. He is not a trick dog. He is just under the absolute control of his trainer.

In the training of his charge Mr. Trimble applies to the dog the psychology of the human, and he believes in treating dog as you would treat a man. He watched how Strongheart reacted to every stimulus—sounds, sights and smells, and worked with him accordingly. He made him change the habits formed in police and Red Cross work, but he did not attempt to try and change the dog's impulses. The actor dog's actions are governed by what he recognizes as the supreme authority and he does anything that he is told because his master has never ridiculed him or betrayed his trust in him. His dog nature has just been understood, and that is why he has become a movie star of the first magnitude.

THAT WOOD PILE

There ain't no poor in Napanee,
Hard times have changed to good,
The ones that lacked a little
Wealth
Have died for want of wood.

Let's sell them wood, and "do"
them good,
Said a few men of renown;
For we can palm off anything
To the simple folks round town.

We find it cheaper yet to burn
Our carpets and our chairs
It finds a job for some poor soul,
And our fuel is less than their's.

So Councilmen of Napanee,
If your reasonings none too good,
Just get your heads together
Then we'll have lots of "wood."

DEAR PEOPLE:—

How's your winter's coal hanging out? Ours is out altogether, but we are not buying much of this charity wood. Oh, no, we have faith, and hope yet to be spared enough sense to know a good thing when we see it. We try to buy economically, and at the same time do the fair thing.

Our Saviour said, "Go Feed the Flocks," so you'll pardon us for referring to the word (feed); feed it means (not fleece). Now people don't be offended at our little chat; we want to keep you from geting the (blues), and remember one thing, "don't get your feet wet." We are still here and doing fine. If we can't keep your house warm we can at least make your feet feel happy. So when you're down town drop in and get warm by our (Hot Air System).

While assisting in moving the household effects of Mr. Earl Whiteman from Forest Mills to Melrose on Friday last, Mr. John McFarlane sustained a broken leg and a number of minor injuries, besides being rendered unconscious for some hours. Mr. McFarlane had driven his load over the railway tracks at Lonsdale and Mr. Whiteman, following him got his load stuck on the track. The teams were doubled up on Mr. Whiteman's load, but the tongue of the sleigh broke. A train coming along hit the load, smashing sleigh and furniture to kindling wood. A piece of the sleigh struck Mr. McFarlane, causing his injuries.

Authors with a talent for presenting in a wholesome, entertaining way unusual situations and odd original plots have been selected. Such an author, standing well near the top among contemporaries, is

Holworthy Hall

Suppose among your casual acquaintances were a man wearing a different face—not a disguise—speaking a different voice, acting and living a changed personality, whom you disclever to be actually someone you formerly had known intimately. Would you not be amazed and mystified? Such is the situation in "The Man Nobody Knew," excepting that the reader holds the secret. You see him in his former identity wherein he was a failure, with record not too savory. You follow him in his changed character going among the same people with all his old proclivities and temptations, yet patiently redeeming the past, making good. His experiences and adventures are remarkable and he has the oddest, most difficult problem ever placed before a man. It especially concerns the girl who had refused him in his former life.
